

"PIRATE" PRISONERS IN NEW YORK JAIL

Lieutenant Beery Says He Can Explain Escape of Francis G. Bailey.

NEW YORK, July 8.—After two months of adventures that might rival those of Captain Kidd, Albert W. Bailey, Harry M. Meyers, and Capt. Alfred Oxley, who, it is charged, helped Francis G. Bailey to steal the steamer Goldsboro and a cargo of merchandise valued at $150,000 and sail with the boat to Honduras, were brought back to the city last evening by Lieut. Peter W. Beery, of the district attorney's staff. Beery arrived with his prisoners on a train from New Orleans and tramped along with them just as proudly as if his most coveted prisoner, Francis G. Bailey, had not escaped when the four prisoners were being brought from Honduras to New Orleans in a boat. Beery would not discuss the escape of his chief prisoner and said that when the facts of Bailey's escape were laid before his superiors there would be no censure. Beery brought his captives to the Church street police station.

Broker or Clerk.
In reply to questions as to his occupation, Bailey said he was a broker or a clerk, he was not sure which. He seemed more agitated by the heat of the cell in which he was placed than by the serious charge on which he was arrested. Meyers, who confessed to thirty-four years old, said he had no home in New York. He said he formerly lived in Beaumont, Tex. Meyers is charged with conspiracy in attempting to defraud New York merchants of merchandise, in that he posed as the consignee of the goods placed on board the Goldsboro before it started on its remarkable voyage.

Captain Oxley did not mind his arrest at all, and seemed willing to put up with all the inconveniences of a hot cell if only his custodians would take care not to harm a ship's chronometer which he carried with him. He took it in his cell with him and laid it carefully on his bunk. The police believe that Oxley can tell more about the theft of the Goldsboro and the expedition of the Baileys than any one else connected with the enterprise.

Francis G. and Albert W. Bailey were the principal officers of a concern called the Export Shipping Company, of 11 Broadway. For about eight years, it appeared, the Export Shipping Company did a legitimate business and its promoters made money. The Baileys lived in quiet luxury with a maid and sister in Avenue H, Flatbush.

With New Concern.
Just before the bank panic of last fall Bailey appeared among New York merchants as the purchasing agent of a supposedly fictitious concern called the General Supply Company of Queensland, Australia. Bailey, it is alleged, went about among the merchants of this and other cities buying large consignments of merchandise for the new company. Bailey told the merchants with whom he dealt that the General Supply Company had deposited funds for payment of the goods in London. Merchants selling to this new customer were instructed to send the drafts to the Export Shipping Company. It is charged that Francis G. Bailey managed to have cashed in New York drafts issued by New York merchants amounting to about $50,000. Thus, it is charged, he not only got the merchandise, but much money.

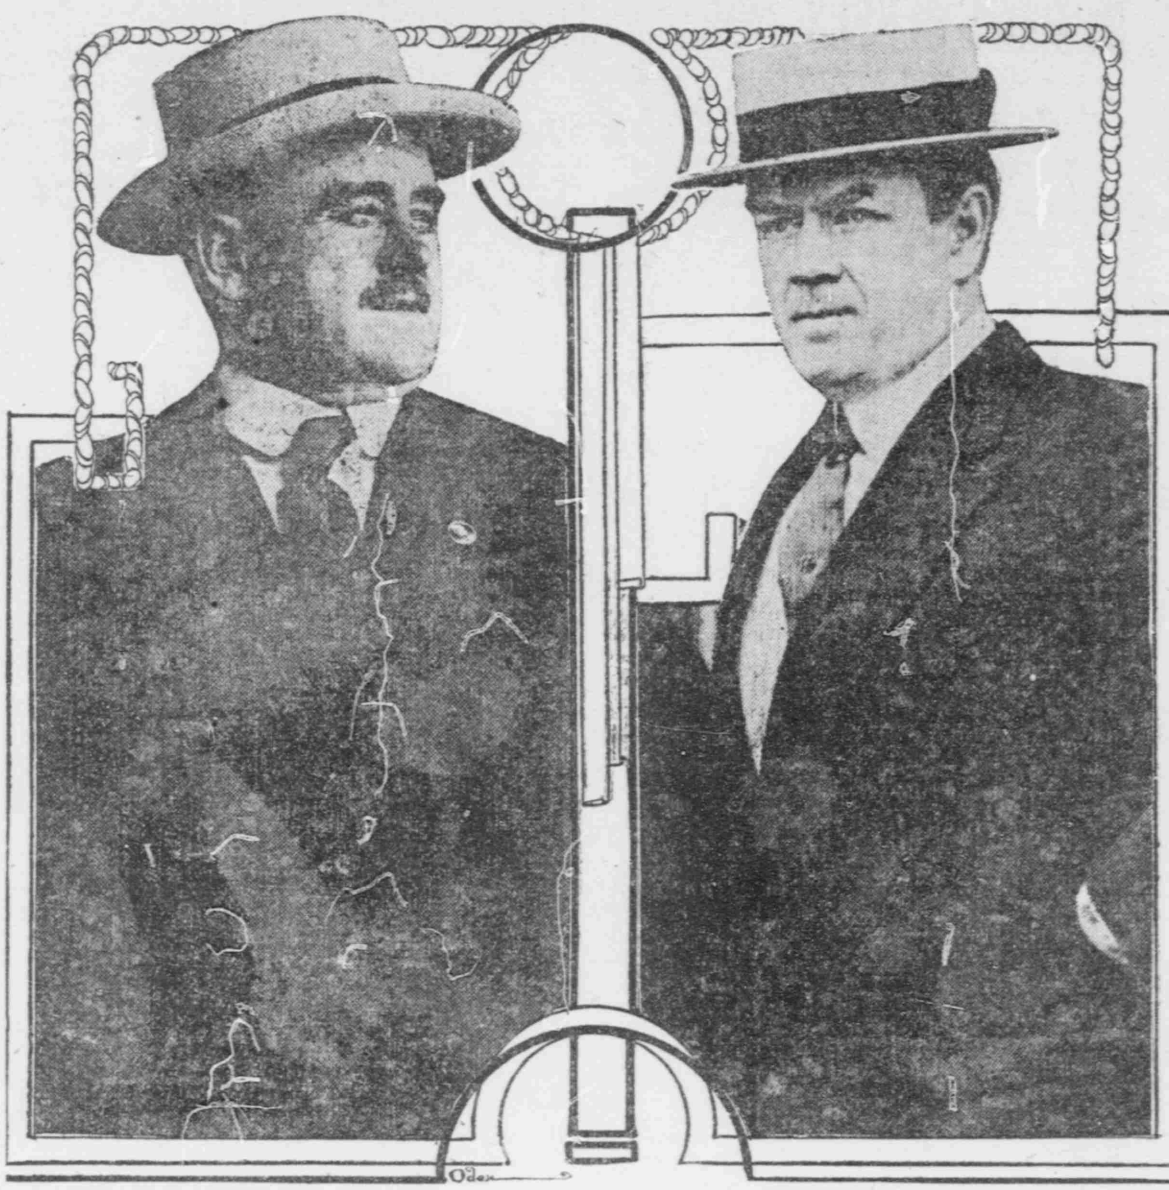

When all the merchandise, including farming and mining implements, that the promoters of the scheme dared to house, was purchased, they bought the Goldsboro from the Clyde line and docked it in South Brooklyn, where all the goods were hurried aboard. Then in the night the two Baileys, Meyers, and Captain Oxley and a crew sailed for Honduras. That country did not have extradition treaties with this country, and the promoters of the enterprise hoped there to be free and live in wealth.

Meanwhile a receiver for the Export Shipping Company had been appointed and he got in touch with the Merchants' Association to see what would be done to capture the craft and those in charge of it. The aid of the Federal authorities was enlisted and the State Department at Washington cabled to all ports in Central and South America to have the ship seized as soon as it should touch port. The Goldsboro finally touched at Le Celba, Honduras, and was promptly detained. The Baileys, Meyers, and Oxley were held until Lieutenant Beery went with him and took the prisoners. When he was about to start to New Orleans on board another vessel, the Utstein, Francis G. Bailey escaped in the night in a small boat and got away.

REBELS SENTENCED TO DIE.

SAIGON, Cochinchina, July 8.—Three leaders of the Chinese rebellion have already been sentenced to death for complicity in the plot to poison the French garrison in the Hanoi barracks, and other convictions are expected in the trial of a score of suspects, which was resumed today. Two hundred French colonial infantrymen were seriously poisoned as a result of this plot.

WANTS ALL PRINTING
DONE AT THE G. P. O.

Typographical Union Meets
This Afternoon to Protest at Distribution.

President Frank A. Kidd has called a meeting of the Columbia Typographical Union, No. 161, for 5 o'clock this afternoon, at Typographical Temple to plan an aggressive campaign to prevent the diverting of Government printing from the Government Printing Office.

It is said that there is a considerable amount of Government printing ordered by some of the independent bureaus and special commissions, but paid for with Government funds, that is not executed at the Government Printing Office.

The question of the printing of the Bureau of the Census, a job worth about $10,000, was to be one of the principal questions to be discussed this afternoon, but the union has been informed that the Comptroller of the Treasury has ruled that this is not Government work and cannot be done at the Government Printing Office.

President Kidd said today that a committee would be appointed at the meeting to act in conjunction with similar committees representing the pressmen, electotypers, and bookbinders' organizations.

A committee will be appointed to take up with Public Printer Leach the subject of increased compensation for machine operators.

KILLS PLAYMATE
OVER AIR RIFLE

CHICAGO, July 8.—Frederick Schroeder, fifteen years old, was killed late yesterday afternoon by a playmate, Henry Nagel, Jr., fourteen years old, in a quarrel over the possession of a small air rifle which belonged to another boy.

After the two boys had quarreled Nagel ran into his home and returned with a shot gun which he pointed at Schroeder with the command: "Now, you get out of my yard mighty quick."

While the weapon was in his hands it was discharged, the charge entering Schroeder's left breast and killing him instantly.

Nagel was arrested and taken to the police station. He said the shooting was accidental, as he did not know the gun was loaded.

Fear in the Democratic Camp
Equal to That of Republicans

DENVER, July 8.—When the delegates poured out of the hotels yesterday morning and set forth on the pilgrimage to the first session of the convention—a heira which turned the streets leading to convention hall into a system of canals flowing with eddying humanity—they marveled much at the expected slaughter.

The impression that the Denver ticket has small chance of election is as remarkably general among the real politicians here, as was the feeling at Chicago, among the same class of people, that the Republican ticket was in danger of going down at the polls.

It is a strange and anomalous situation. The best explanation that can be given for it is that the politicians have lost their grip on the public. In both parties they admit as much. They don't know how the voters are to be organized and managed; they are uncertain whether old-time methods will "go" this year.

They know that the people are doing their own thinking as they never did it before. They realize that throughout the Middle West and Far West party lines are utterly effaced. They consider that the outcome will depend on what is done between now and election day.

Each side plans a campaign of education; each is anxious to find the best possible campaign manager, and each has experienced difficulty in unheard-of measure in fixing upon the right sort of man. In both political camps is manifest distrust for the candidate, so Mr. Bryan's disposition to conciliate and tone down his radicalism without surrendering essentials of a progressive program are dubious whether he will be able to get through a campaign without unmasking either a dangerous degree of radicalism on one side, or on the other an anxiety to win which will offend the devout progressives of his traditional following.

Tammany, in control of the New York caucus, named a committee to draft a complete platform, and instructed it to make the platform radical one. The result was that the Gompers anti-injunction plank was written into it, declaring for prohibition of injunctions in labor disputes.

Mr. Bryan believes in it, but doesn't want it in the platform, because he fears it will cost votes. Tammany seemingly wants to force an ultra-Bryanistic platform on Bryan, so that if he is to be defeated it can be made perfectly clear that he was defeated because the country is afraid of his extreme ideas.

Already the managers are looking to the future, laying their wires to get Bryan finally eliminated from leadership, if he is beaten this year. Most people say that, beaten this time, Bryan will be politically dead. Not so the far-seeing politicians, many of whom say that if Bryan makes a better run this time than in his former campaigns, and loses the election, say by reason of losing some pivotal State by a close vote, he will be as big a figure as ever four years hence, and will have to be nominated again.

It is this fear which has made the Guffeys, the Sullivans, the Murphys, and the rest of the anti-Bryanites anxious to keep their hold on the organization in their big States, so that they may be in shape to help boot Bryan out. His followers insist or regard him as a factor even after he is thrice beaten.
